

The New India Express (City Express)
17th March 2006

Parikrma Gets Support From Adobe

Software Company Adobe Systems Inc has joined hands with Parikrma, a non-profit organisation working for the upliftment of slum children by providing latest digital education and also multi-media communication tools for these children.

Adobe has entered into a three-year partnership with Parikrma, allowing it to use its software to deliver high quality instruction in English. Parikrma follows the ICSE syllabus.

Adobe Systems Inc. CEO Bruce Chizen said community development is one of our core values “We aim to make a positive impact on our surrounding communities by supporting charitable causes and employee volunteer activities,” he said.

Currently, Parikrma is providing 620 children coming from 26 slums in various parts of the City.

CEO of Parikrma Shukla Bose said “We ensure that these children will have a great opportunity to compete on equal terms with children from privileged schools. This is the only way to break poverty and make them contributing members of the society,” she added.